Dear Hiring Team,

I'm a frontend developer student from Noroff with a bachelor's in digital Culture from the University of Bergen. I build clean, accessible interfaces using HTML5, CSS, and Vanilla JavaScript, and I care deeply about creating web experiences that are intuitive, inclusive, and well-crafted. And I bring an equally strong attention to design, making sure everything I build looks as considered as it functions.

My degree gave me a strong understanding of how people interact with digital environments – and that human-centered thinking is at the core of everything I build. From responsive layouts and semantic markup to typography and visual hierarchy, I approach frontend development as both technical and creative discipline, and I hold myself to a high standard in both.

I've also spent time working closely with Figma, which means I'm comfortable moving fluidly between design and code.

One thing that drives me, both in development and in life, is a genuine love of learning. I believe there is no finish line when it comes to knowledge – every project, every bug, every new tool is an opportunity to grow. That mindset keeps me curious, keeps me improving, and means I'll never stop pushing to do better work.

Alongside my development work, I've spent several years managing Bistro Breim, where I've led a team, planned operations, and built things from scratch under real pressure. That experience has made me resourceful, communicative, and comfortable taking ownership – qualities I bring to every project I work on.

I'm looking for my first professional role in frontend development where I can contribute meaningfully, keep learning, and be part of a team that takes quality seriously.

Thank you for taking the time to read this.

Sincerely,

Ada Linn Taule
